[From the San Francisco Morning Call.]

"Let the world talk," he said im- Little Lily, with slow deliberateness. a quarter of a mile and back for help, A VISITOR FROM THE OTHER WORLD. OCTOBER.

Oh, crickets, hush your hoding song! I know the truth it makes so plain You say that autumn dies ere long. And soon the winter's wrath and wrong Will chill the pallid world again.

Oh, mournful wind of midnight, cease To breathe your low prophetic sigh Too clearly for my spirit's peace And feel December drawing nigh Fall silently, October rain,

Nor take that wailing under-tone-Nor beat so loudly on the pane, The sad, monotonous refrain Which tells me summer-time has flown, Be charler of your golden days,

Oh, goldenest mouth of all the throug Oh, pour less lavishly your rays! Hoard carefully your purple haze So haply it may last more long Spendthrift October! art thou wise Who wasteth in thy plenteous prime More beauty on the earth and skies,

More hue and glow, than would suffice To brighten all the Winter time? Yes-better autumn, all delight. And then a Winter all unblest, Than months of mingled dark and bright Of faded tints and pallid light,

Imperfect dreams and broken rest

Ah, better if our life could know One wholly happy, perfect year, One time of cloudless joy and glow-And then its days of rayless wee-Than this commingled hope and fear This doubt and dread which naught consoles

Which marks our brows ere manhood's prime: This dark uncertainty which rolls Like chariot-wheels across our souls, And makes us old before our time So pour your light, October skies, Oh, fairest skies which ever are! Put on, O. Earth, your bravest dyes,

And smile, although the cricket cries, And Winter threatens from afar!
